

Contents

Preface	vii
1 Introduction: getting to grips with water	1
2 The regional water balance statement: a new tool for water resource planning	9
3 Integrated water resources management and the hydrosocial balance	20
4 Sharing the benefits of the river basin's water economy	37
5 Farm-level drought management: an irrigation case-study from the UK	43
6 The potential role for economic instruments in drought management	58
7 'Virtual water' and Occam's razor	68
8 Virtual water and the Kyoto consensus	72
9 The urban market for farmers' water-rights	77
10 The demand for water: four interpretations	86
11 The political economy of water abstraction charges	91

12	Twelve theses on the cost and use of irrigation water	101
13	Behavioural studies of the domestic demand for water services in Africa	104
14	Deconstructing households' willingness-to-pay for water in low-income countries	116
15	Industrial effluent policy: economic instruments and environmental regulation	130
16	Nitrate pollution on the island of Jersey: managing water quality within European Community directives	140
17	Catchment water deficits in the twenty-first century	158
18	Catchment water deficits: an application to Zambia's Kafue river basin	167
19	The Thames catchment: a river basin at the tipping point	178
20	Water resource impacts of new housebuilding in the Thames region: 2006–2025	191
21	Beneficial impacts for the Thames river basin of water company leakage reduction 2006–2025	198
	Bibliography	205
	Index	214